

I have spent the last 25+ years working for three Fortune 500 companies in various supply chain roles. I have led large teams, managed over $3B in annual company spend, negotiated large multi-million dollar contracts, and worked directly with senior company leaders. Being creative and finding solutions to complex business problems has been what I have enjoyed about my corporate career. I have a BS degree from University of Phoenix, and I am also lifetime C.P.M. (Certified Purchasing Manager) with the Institute of Supply Chain Management. Additionally, I have a CPIM certification with APICS for production and inventory management, and numerous other leadership and corporate sponsored trainings.

I love the game of basketball! My basketball career started on a dirt driveway with a backboard and rim attached to an old utility pole and continues today on a cement driveway with an old beat-up Gorilla backboard with a rim less than horizontal. In between there has been countless hours of drills, practices, and games, along with tears, joy, & heartache with every church, city, & school team. Basketball has taught me the importance of strong inter-personal relationships and that success in life comes by working with others focused on positive outcomes. I played in high school and have coached youth church and city feeder teams.
